November 2020

In my series of 4 pictures I wanted to show how children's toys or games can be used to teach valuable lessons throughout life and prepare children to be more balanced.

According to me, the building blocks signify stability by starting with building a strong base. The supporting blocks are there to show that it's ok to take help. I shot the picture from a higher angle to show that sometimes you may not see all the hard work and you may only see the result which often deceives people.

The Rubik's cube is one of the smartest toys made. It instills problem solving skills and encourages children to work smart. I have placed two of them on a platter to show that everyone has the option to apply their knowledge but it depends on how smartly you use it. There are only 2 cubes to show that life gives us limited opportunities and we must seize every one of them we get to work smart and work hard.

The crayons are a simple reminder to have fun and enjoy the small things in life. I used a classical musical piece as the background as I see that people are often focused on discipline and perfectionism that they forget the artistic value of the piece. The butterfly is a reminder to let your mind wander and be free.

I have placed one die amongst bingo cards inside a vase to show that at the end of the day many things come down to luck and being in the right place at the right time. I used a glass vase to show that even though luck isn't in our control, we can see what we assume to be its effects.

Lastly, I wanted to mention that the sunlight in the photos is a reminder that the sun comes up every morning no matter what.

Thank you!
